

Gronow, Jukka

The Sociology of Taste

London, New York (Routledge) 1997, pp. XIV+199

CONTENTS

Preface	ix
Acknowledgements	xiii
1 INTRODUCTION:	1
Need, Taste and Pleasure — or understanding modern consumption	1
The parallel between philosophy and gastronomy; The need for food and nutrition science; Good taste, gastronomy and social distinctions; Good taste and the problem of the aesthetics of taste
2 PHILOSOPHICAL AESTHETICS AND THE REFINEMENT OF TASTE	13
Sociological aesthetics or aesthetic sociology	13
Custom, public opinion and social cohesion
What is good taste?	18
The refinement of taste in France; Distinction and class tastes; The hedonism of the new classes and the emergence of the ideal consumer; From the social hierarchy of tastes to mass fashion
3 LUXURY, KITSCH AND FASHION	31
Kitsch, fashion and the corruption of taste	31
How social interaction is apt to corrupt taste; Why do the standards of the respectability of the leisure class become the general standard of decency?; In spite of our inborn sense of beauty our objects are not getting more beautiful; Why does the entire material culture of the late nineteenth century create an impression of kitsch?; The war against kitsch in the name of democracy; Marketing kitsch; Kitsch as a historical stage between class and mass fashion;
Kitsch and luxury in the Soviet Union	49
The secret of the caviar sandwich; The old and the new luxury; The great retreat; The new happy life; ‘Happiness lives in the country of plenty’; The coming into being of the new middle class; Democratic luxury and the pleasures of the few; Was there any Soviet design? The socialist way of life: decency and small delights; Consumers and the end of socialism;
Fashion and plenty in the post-industrial society	70
Consumer society as an abundant society

4	TASTE AND FASHION	74
	Fashion as a self-dynamic social process	74
	The modern fashion pattern; The pleasures of novelty;
	The social function of style and fashion	83
	Immanuel Kant and Georg Simmel on fashion; The antinomy of taste; Kant's community of the united tastes; Fashion and taste; Class fashion or mass fashion?; Lifestyle, style of art and fashion; The community of fashion;
	Taste and the process of collective selection	101
	Fashion as Zeitgeist; The Finnish study of fashion design
	Food fashions and social order	111
	The confusing picture of modern food culture; The ideal diet of the Finns?, Health sells, but education is needed; Scientific and folk models of nutrition; Health food ascetics and the management of the body; Vitamin deficiency and the 'hidden hunger'; The product as the real ascetic; Marketing the 'fashion for health'; The role of fashion in food culture
5	THE BEAUTY OF SOCIAL FORMS	131
	Simmel on social forms	131
	Can a taste or a smell be beautiful?; The beauty of a meal; The aesthetic sociology of Georg Simmel; Sociability and pleasure;
	Play and beauty	144
	Play, art, and social forms; The ideal world of play and art; Friedrich Schiller's programme of aesthetic socialization;
6	CONCLUSION:	158
	The aesthetic sociology
	and the aestheticization of everyday life	158
	Does money beautify social relations?; The aestheticization of everyday life; The community of art and the art of community; The facticity of a community vs. aesthetic sociation
	Notes	172
	Bibliography	180
	Index	190